

Fenwick, East Ayrshire

Population 1,038

Fenwick is in East Ayrshire. It was a Covenanter stronghold with a rural economy in historic times. It was a shoemaking and weaving village in the 18th century distinguished by its early development of a weavers' cooperative. It is now bypassed by the trunk road but was formerly a coaching stop on the Glasgow Kilmarnock road. Today it is a local service centre with small businesses.

This type of small town is a suburban or commuter locality with a prevalence of higher income and private housing. A large proportion of the population are over 45, and many are retired. Many people own their home. There is also a high proportion of people in professional employment and a high proportion of residents are educated to HNC level or above. Many residents own two or more cars.
