GLASGOW CITY

POPULATION 617,794

Glasgow is Scotland's largest conurbation. It grew rapidly following the Industrial Revolution becoming a key transatlantic port with a heavy industrial base. Shipbuilding and engineering were key to its economy. The decline in both has seen new activities grow including a creative arts sector, a growing financial sector, manufacturing, light industry and research and education. It has promoted its role as a venue for major events following the Commonwealth Games in 2014 and gained recognition as European City of Culture, host for the Garden Festival and UK City of Architecture and Design.

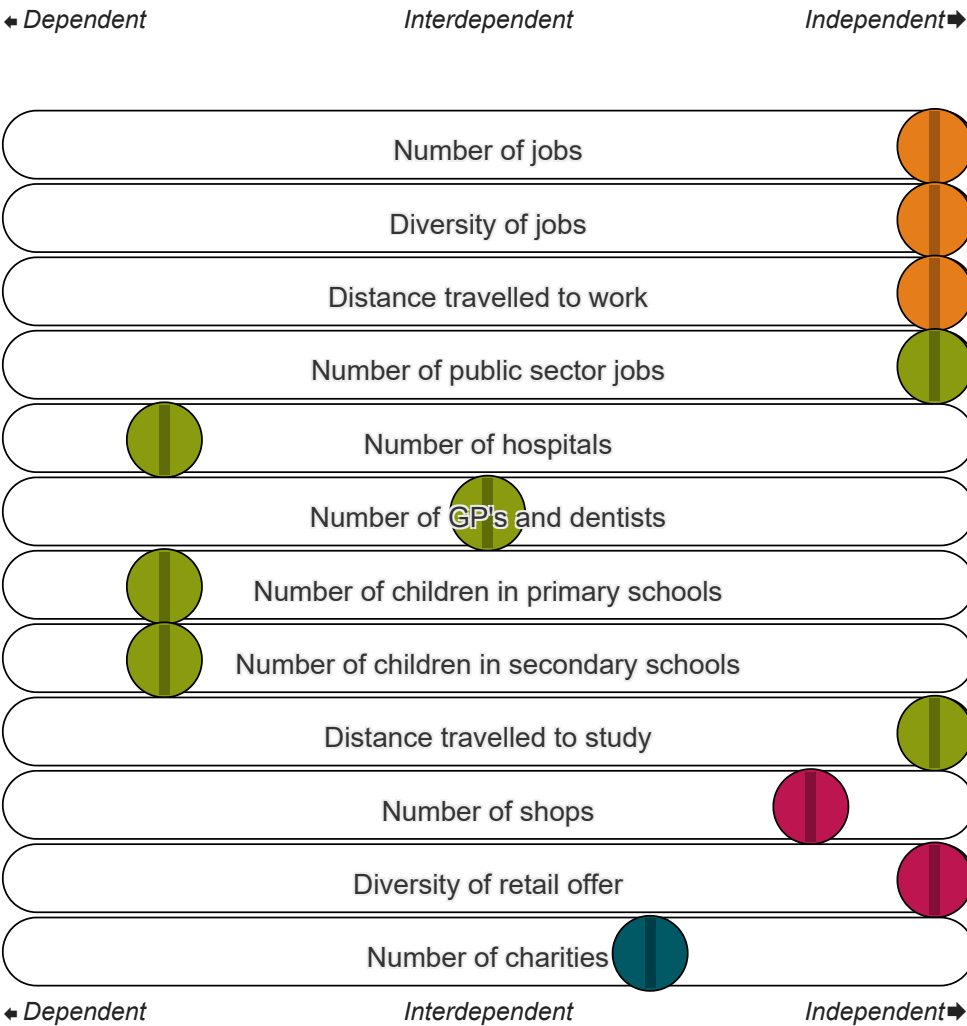

Social and council housing are prevalent in cities like Glasgow. Manufacturing and construction are the dominant forms of employment and health and social work services are particularly active. In this kind of city there is a relatively high level of unemployment, and educational attainment and car ownership are low.
