St Andrews is in Fife It is an historic town with an ecclesiastical history stretching back to pre-reformation times. The university was founded in 1411. Post- reformation times saw the town decline. Today it is known as a tourist town popular with both local and international visitors. It is also the home of golf and the Royal and Ancient are a governing body for the sport. The university has expanded its student numbers over the last 40 years with new building on the North Haugh.

St Andrews has a large student population, with many living in privately rented accommodation with other students. Many are in part time work in the accommodation and food service sectors. This shows that a significant part of the workforce is likely to be made up of those working alongside their studies. Many are reliant on walking, cycling, or public transport to move around, with a comparably small proportion of the population owning cars.

St Andrews is an interdependent to independent town.

The university characterises the town in a way that uniquely sets it apart from all other Scottish towns analysed here.
